Not illustrated. 1828 Excerpt: .kind, of which species the cauliflower is one; that spelling, therefore, of cauliflower which begins with the letters c, o, l, seems to be derived from this source. But cole itself cornea from the Saxon word c, a, w, l; and hence we have the other spelling beginning with c, a, u, l. The pronunciation is the same in both; and the short sound of the vowel o in the first syllable, has done much towards establishing the former spelling; while etymology puts in a stronger claim for the latter, as coming more directly from the Saxon original. I hope to hear from you again on a similar subject, and am, in the mean time, Sincerely yours, Theophilus Wright. LETTER IB. Hartford, May 3, 1823. My Dear Edward, From the tenor of your letter of the 27 th ultimo, it appears that you are surprized at the change in the affairs of Mr. Nimrod. When you have acquired more knowledge of the world you will understand that such changes are the natural consequence of thoughtlessness and expensive habits; that every family is under the influence of economy, or of waste; and that wilful waste makes woful want. If you consider these principles, and apply them in the present instance, your wonder will cease, and you will perceive nothing in the event but what might have been anticipated by any rational person acquainted with the circumstances. But you will probably ask why Mr. Nimrod himself could not...
