Other regulatory agencies world-wide can have different numbers of neutrons. When have similar expectations. Because CSIA is a new atoms differ only in the number of neutrons, they approach in environmental investigations, there are referred to as isotopes of each other. If a par-no widely accepted standards for accuracy, preci-ticular isotope is not radioactive, it is called a sion and sensitivity, and no established approaches stable isotope. Because they differ in the number to document accuracy, precision, sensitivity and of neutrons, isotopes differ in mass, and they can representativeness. be separated using a mass spectrometer. In recent This Guide is intended for managers of hazardous years mass spectrometers have been joined to gas waste sites who must design sampling plans that chromatographs to allow separation of individual will include CSIA and specify data quality objec-organic compounds in a mixture, followed by tives for CSIA analyses, for analytical chemists combustion of each separate organic compound who must carry out the analyses, and for staff of to carbon dioxide, and then determination of the regulatory agencies who must review and approve ratio of isotopes in the carbon dioxide with a mass the sampling plans and data quality objectives, and spectrometer.
