Excerpt: . . . 11 from now, are we going to continue to have this kind of trade def-icit or is our debt that we owe the rest of the world going to grow, is there an exit strategy or a downward tide path. How do you see this going forward Secretary S. I think we are putting in place, the finance min-NOW isters, central bank governors, leaders of the institutions of the global economy are putting in place a pretty good adjustment framework which, over time - over time will see the imbalances - Mr. F. What is your projection for the United States 5 years RANK from now, trade deficit Are we going to owe the rest of the world more Secretary S. If we continue to do the things that I talked NOW about and the rest of the world does the things that I talked about, higher growth rates, flexible exchange rates, I cant give you a number, but we are going to see that trend line reversing and begin to come down. Mr. F. Begin to come down; 5 years from now, will it be RANK down noticeably Secretary S. I dont have a good prediction on that. I do NOW think we will see an orderly and effective adjustment process that will put us on a course to reduce the imbalances. I am confident of that. But it does take these other things to happen. RANK Mr. F. Yes. The poet laureate...
