Conversations with My Grandchildren: Truths and Nothing But the Truth tells the story of the rapid mental and physical deterioration of the authors 90 year old mother, a first generation American Jew brought up in a world of discrimination and hope, who, beginning with her response to an ad seeking retread housewives went on to author social studies textbooks for elementary and middle school children, which led to her never-ending quest to discern the truths of democracy, which unsuccessfully ended with her effort to be allowed to die with dignity and minimal pain from what she incorrectly self-diagnosed as a fatal hip fracture. The authors mother began this book, spending the last ten years of her life writing a book to her grandchildren regarding the challenges of growing up in a democracy, focusing particularly on her own history of facing and overcoming anti-Semitism in her neighborhood, at school and at work, and on her becoming part of a reshaping of the American educational system following the panic which ensued from the Soviet Unions winning the race to send...
